

Health Reporting and Monitoring in Switzerland: Overview and the National Health Report 2025 as an example

Health reporting and monitoring are essential components of evidence-based health policy, offering data to identify trends, inform priority-setting, and evaluate interventions. This presentation begins with an overview of the various reporting and monitoring approaches of the Swiss Health Observatory, followed by the National Health Report 2025 as a case example, focusing on the topic of mental health.