

Workshop: Global Health and its Critics

Dr. Tine Hanrieder

Tutor:	Dr. Tine Hanrieder is a political scientist and junior research group leader at the WZB Berlin Social Science Center. She works in the fields of global health politics, international organization, and the sociology of expert knowledge. Her current research project explores the re-import of humanitarian and health aid practices from the Global South to industrialized countries.
Dates/Rooms:	Thursday, 18 October 2018, 13:15 - 17:00 room tbd. Friday, 19 October 2018, 9:00 - 17:00 room tbd. Saturday, 20 October 2018, 9:00 – 13:00 room tbd. University of Lucerne, Frohburgstrasse 3, 6002 Lucerne
Language	Course language will be English.
Contact:	phd_healthsem@unilu.ch
Registration:	Deadline for registration: October 4, 2018 Maximum number of participants: 25 PhD students register by email to phd_healthsem@unilu.ch MA students (political sciences) register via Uniportal and by email to phd_healthsem@unilu.ch
Contents:	The workshop introduces participants to competing conceptions of Global Health and their political implications: Conflicting security, human rights and economic agendas; Potential for political mobilization and successful social movements; Reconfiguration of North-South relationships through knowledge diffusion and reverse innovation.
Prerequisites	Interest in international/global health problems
Materials	Background reading: Harman, Sophie (2012): Global Health Governance. London: Routledge. A list of compulsory readings will be provided after registration. Participants are expected to prepare the compulsory readings and give presentations on selected global health institutions and policies.
Credits	2 ECTS
Notes:	This course is mainly for PhD students, post-docs and MA Political Sciences students, other participants may be admitted on request. For MA and PhD students enrolled at the University of Lucerne, PhD students from the SLHS cohort and PhD students enrolled in a SSPH+ Program no registration fee is charged.