

Conference on Theology and Leadership

In a world marked by leadership fatigue, fragmented authority, and organizational disillusionment, scholars from around the world will discuss a vital question:

How can we invite the S/spirit into our leadership?

This conference seeks to examine how “spirit” – understood both theologically as the Holy Spirit (with a capital S) and, from a social-scientific perspective, as the “good or bad” spirit within a team, group, or organization – animates leadership practices, shapes collective purpose, and enables moral and organizational transformation.

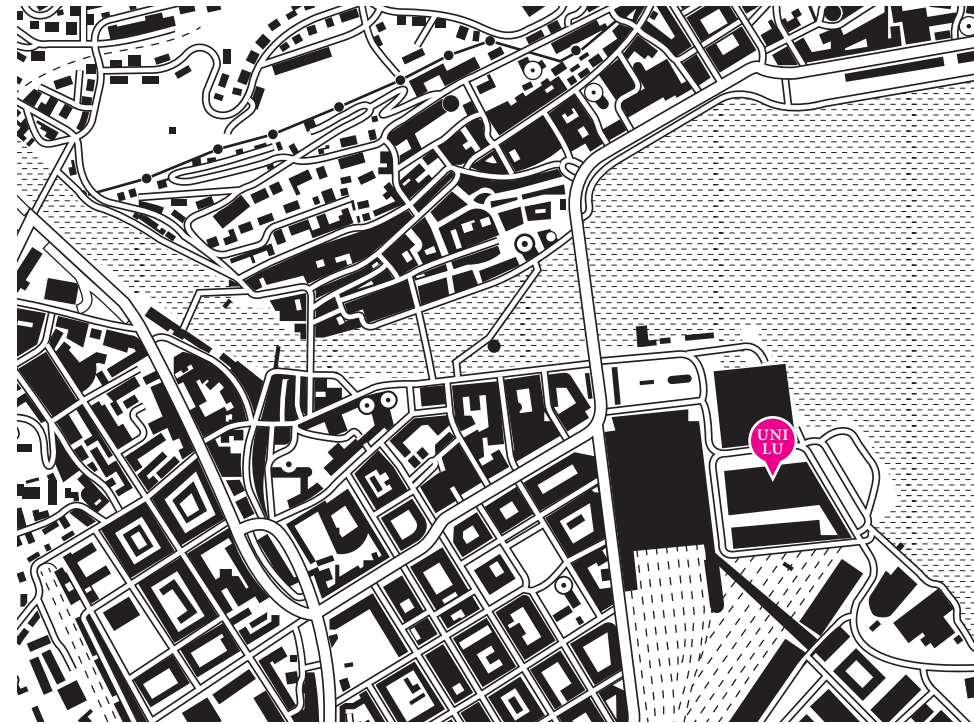

This conference is designed for those who are willing to:

- Rethink leadership from its foundations in the foundations and conceptual grounding sessions—exploring how spirit enters leadership.
- Engage leadership as practice in practices of leadership and verticalization—through communication, relationships, and team processes.
- Learn from diverse contexts in global and institutional contexts across cultures, organizations, and traditions.
- Stay with the tensions of leadership in sessions on power, conflict, and the dark sides of leadership.
- Experience leadership as transformation
in the identity and transformation block—towards whole-person leadership.
