CONTENT

In the seminar “HR Business Simulation”, students form groups to represent companies, which compete in a business simulation. In total, five competing companies act in an enclosed market. The companies all produce the same product: solar cells. 2-3 of the five companies are managed by students, the other companies are simulated by a computer.

Students incorporate different roles (e.g., HR, production, marketing, procurement, research & development, finances, etc.) and act according to them. The companies’ market behavior is influenced by the students’ decisions, which are synchronized by the computer network and set the companies in direct competition. The dependencies between the elements are displayed transparently (“open rule simulation”).

In the seminar we simulate 5-7 business years. After an introduction into the simulation and before completion and reflection, each seminar day includes: 1) theoretical input on selected topics, 2) strategy meeting in the student group, 3) simulation of 1-3 business years in which the students take quarterly decisions to manage their company. The simulation takes place on the own notebook with the software of the provider Dynaplan (www.dynaplan.com).

LEARNING GOALS

Learning goals and competencies: The students simulate a company and the related strategic decisions. Thereby they gain leadership competence on the level of leading groups in a simulated situation. The students integrate the acquired knowledge from their previous business administration courses at the University and get to know the relationship between the different business areas: business strategy, HR strategy, marketing and controlling. The students learn how to derive an HR strategy from a business strategy and how to implement it in operational HR processes. The students tie theoretical inputs with own experience, practical experience and their own reflection. The simulation increases joined-up, systemic thinking and makes students experience and reflect team dynamics.

PREREQUISITES

HR Business Simulation addresses students from the Master level as well as students from higher semesters in the Bachelor (5./6. Semester). The simulation integrates topics from several lectures of the business administration bachelor studies. Requirements for this seminar are therefore basic understanding of business administration with a focus on strategic management and human resource management. In addition, students benefit from experiences of lectures like Strategic HRM, Advanced Marketing Management and Corporate Finance.

EXAMINATION FORMAT

Written report of the company strategy (per group) (50%, due 16.9.2022) and individual reflection (50%, due 30.9.2022).

We expect 100% class attendance, active participation and contribution during the course.
